

Ana Maria Seman
Regional Climate Lead

"I joined WWF in 2017 and recently switched to the role of Climate and Infrastructure Regional Lead. Having an academic background in post-war reconstruction and energy studies, I am passionate about building a sustainable world. In my role I am dealing with monitoring and advocating for improved policy frameworks for reaching climate neutrality in CEE countries as well as demanding accountability for projects that can be harmful for climate and biodiversity.

My motivation is my trust in the better angels of our nature, as humans. However idealistic it sounds, I believe in the power of idealism and that it requires determination, passion and optimism. I can put these into practice at WWF where we are facing new challenges each day.

My share of adventures included living and working in Somalia and hitchhiking in Iraq, places of amazing beauty and warmth. With WWF and the challenges we are tackling, I am not missing any of these previous adventures."
